Bibliology (book science) and its practical applications in the works of Professor Barbara Bieńkowska (1934–2022)¹

Abstract: Professor Barbara Bieńkowska (1934–2022), among others director of the Institute of Library and Information Science at the University of Warsaw (1981–1987), president of the Polish Bibliological Society (1989–2003, since 2003 honorary president of PTB), member and chairwoman of the scientific and program councils of many scientific institutions and editorial boards, left behind more than 170 articles and books. Among them, there is no shortage of publications of fundamental importance to the development of Polish bibliology, to its achievements, theory and methodology. This article focuses on B. Bieńkowska's studies of the history of Polish books and historical book collections, research on the losses of Polish libraries during World War II, as well as the scientific registration and documentation of Polish and Polonia's collections and Polish writing collections remaining outside Poland.

Key words: Bieńkowska Barbara (1934–2022) – bibliology – book science – historical bibliology – history of books and libraries – losses of Polish libraries during World War II – Polish and Polonia's collections and Polonica outside Poland

Słowa kluczowe: Bieńkowska Barbara (1934–2022) – bibliologia – wiedza o książce – bibliologia historyczna – historia książki i bibliotek – straty bibliotek polskich podczas II wojny światowej – zbiory polskie, polonijne i polonica poza granicami Polski

Prof. Barbara Bieńkowska (1934–2022) began her scientific work under the guidance of prominent Polish scholars – classical philologist Kazimierz Kumaniecki (1905–1977; supervisor of Bieńkowska's master's degree in classical philology, 1955) and historian Stanisław Herbst (1907–1973; promoter of her doctorate in history, 1964). Bieńkowska's independence and scientific position were confirmed by her habilitation dissertation “Copernicus and heliocentrism in Polish mental culture until the end of the 18th century” (“Kopernik i heliocentrzyzm w polskiej kulturze umysłowej do końca XVIII wieku”), defended in 1970, which included an analysis of the penetration of Copernican theory into public consciousness.

The role of a book in Polish culture

For the next two decades, as a research and teaching fellow at the Institute of Library and Information Science at the University of Warsaw, in her research B. Bieńkowska focused on the history of books and book collections in the context of their function and socio-cultural significance, particularly studying their role in the development of knowledge. An important inspiration for her were the thoughts on the history of the book as an object of scientific research of another of Bieńkowska's masters – the historian of science and philosophy, bibliologist and librarian Aleksander Birkenmajer (1890–1967)². B. Bieńkowska's scientific works has resulted in a number of important studies. Namely, she described the old book culture in Poland in the monograph The Old Polish World of Book (Staropolski świat książek, Wrocław 1976), while the general coverage of the book's history and contemporaneity were the joint publications of Bieńkowska and Halina Chamerska (1922–2008)³ – to date, the only synthesis of the history of the Polish book that has been published in English: Books in Poland: past and present (Wiesbaden 1990)⁴, and a popularizing study A Thousand Years of Books and Libraries in Poland (Tysiąc lat książek i bibliotek w Polsce, Wrocław 1992). The two authors also prepared a synthesis of the book's general history, published under the title An outline of the history of the book (Zarys dziejów książki, Warszawa 1987). The last published work of B. Bieńkowska in this field was A book throughout history (Książka na przestrzeni dziejów, Warszawa 2005), prepared in collaboration with Elizabeth Maruszak.

Increasingly abundant Polish and foreign bibliographical literature has contributed to the creation of the aforementioned studies, representing, according to Bieńkowska's term, both "bibliology sensu largo" (the study of the structure and properties of communication through graphic recording) and "bibliology sensu stricto" (knowledge of the external features of a book, the ability to analyze and describe them)⁵. In the case of the history of the book in Poland, the literature unevenly covered different historical periods, regions, sub-regions and local centers. Research on historical book collections has played a special role in expanding knowledge about the past of the book in Poland, its function and socio-cultural significance. Analyzing these studies, B. Bieńkowska found that many of them belong to the "external" layer of research on historical book collections – many of these works presented the circumstances of the establishment, the conditions of operation and the role of libraries, without an in-depth analysis of the book collections themselves⁶. In order to direct and dynamize research work in this field, B. Bieńkowska established in 1975 at the Institute of Library Science and Scientific Information (since 1997 the Institute of Scientific Information and Bibliological Studies) at the University of Warsaw the publishing series "From the History of Polish Historical Book Collections" ("Z Badań nad Polskimi Księgozbiorami Historycznymi") – since 2005, the magazine published under the title of "Studies into the History of the Book and Book Collections" ("Z Badań nad Książką i Księgozbiorami Historycznymi"). In the introduction to the first issue of the series, she wrote:

Without the most complete possible scientific registration of the centers of book culture, without creating a map of them confronting the maps of other intellectual centers of old Poland, we will not be able to answer the question of what role books played in shaping the intellectual, artistic and moral culture of Polish society in the past. In turn, without this foundation, we cannot determine the function of the book in our society now and in the future. Thus, the current state of knowledge requires, first of all, as extensive and comprehensive as possible, but focused, organized and methodologically disciplined source research, leading to the detection and interpretation of as many traces of the presence of the book in ancient Poland. Our historical collections were catastrophically destroyed and dispersed. We currently only have an unknown percentage of the unknown total.

But, paradoxical though it may seem, we are relatively better at knowing what we have lost than what we currently have. This is because not all collections of manuscripts and old prints are yet covered by the basic registration, a negligible number have been examined in terms of provenance, only a few collections have lived to see a monographic study. Particularly important here is the work on specialized information and documentation of collections. But, after all, historical collections can furthermore answer many very complex questions, especially in the field of the reception of ideas and the history of social mentality. The results obtained through the study of book collections by bibliological methods perfectly complement and enrich the knowledge gained through other means⁷.

Bieńkowska's great concern was the methodological correctness of the studies undertaken, the proper scientific workshop of bibliologists, hence in the pages of "From the History of Polish Historical Book Collections" as editor she published such important texts, such as Maria Sipayłło's article (1975) on the method of provenance research of old prints⁸. This text is constantly referred to by researchers⁹ and used in university didactics. B. Bieńkowska herself has also repeatedly published her thoughts on the methodology of bibliological studies. Her articles, such as those published in the second half of the 1980s. – indicating the directions of research on the history of books and historical book collections (1986)¹⁰, taking into account the need to develop regional studies (1988)¹¹ – contributed to a number of studies based on properly used source materials, published among others just in the pages of "From the History of Polish Historical Book Collections". The timeliness, vitality of the mentioned texts is evidenced by the fact that they are quoted by contemporary researchers¹².

In the pages of “From the History of Polish Historical Book Collections” also published articles of students who, under the guidance of B. Bieńkowska, at a seminar conducted at the Institute of Library and Information Science at the University of Warsaw, wrote theses on the history of libraries and home book collections. Methodologically correct and based on rich source material, these articles have been cited by researchers in historical bibliology¹³.

Thanks in part to her contributions to the theory and methodology of the discipline¹⁴, Bieńkowska was able to state in 2010 that: “Bibliology appears in their [other sciences] light not only as a fully formed independent scientific discipline, but also one that is constantly expanding its scope of competence”¹⁵, as well as needed for other scientific disciplines. Indeed, bibliological research is interdisciplinary¹⁶ and largely comparative¹⁷ in nature. Therefore, important in the scientific output of B. Bieńkowska are works precisely from the borderline of bibliology and history of science, showing the close relationship between these two disciplines and at the same time their cultural aspect. In them, she pointed out how important a role the book has played in the history of science¹⁸. According to B. Bieńkowska, historical bibliographical studies in particular serve to “not only to their own discipline, but also to other fields of science, especially the humanities and social sciences”. The oeuvre of bibliology must therefore “constitute an essential component of the science of culture and society”¹⁹, as well as the sciences of communication, literature, psychology, sociology and pedagogy, and above all, this body of work is an integral part of historical knowledge, the history of literature, the history of art or culture²⁰. The book, “as a carrier of content, a channel for the travel of ideas, a means of influence, also occupies ideologues and politicians of all times and orientations”, Bieńkowska added²¹.

These links of bibliology reflect to some extent the studies offered to B. Bieńkowska in two collective publications – Bibliology an Integrating Discipline (Bibliologia dyscypliną integrującą, Warszawa 1993)²² and Books have their own history (Książki mają swoją historię, Warszawa 2021)²³, which included articles by domestic and foreign authors on the theory and practice of bibliology and library science; the history of books and the press; the history of book collections, libraries and reading; and the history of science.

The body of work in historical bibliology was successfully applied by Bieńkowska and her colleagues in their work on the history of libraries and private book collections during World War II.

Book collections destroyed, dispersed, relocated and seized – documentation of losses of Polish libraries during World War II

One of the important research areas of historiography is the study of the effects of World War II on culture, including the history and consequences of the devastation and looting of cultural property. Between 1939 and 1945, many libraries of all types were destroyed – under various circumstances, entire libraries or their collections, premises, equipment, documentation were lost. The collections were also subject to displacement. As a result, they were dispersed, collections were broken up, and library inventories and catalogs were lost²⁴.

Due to their importance to social life, culture, science and education, libraries in Poland became subject to destruction, carried out by both German and Soviet occupiers. Also contributing to the disorganization of some of the surviving book collections were the post-war actions of the communist authorities in Poland, such as the relocation and parcelling out of collections and the destruction of parts of them²⁵.

Wartime library losses were the subject of documentation and research aimed at estimating them even during the occupation of Poland. This work continued immediately after the end of the war. However, according to B. Bieńkowska:

especially with the end of the 1940s and the beginning of the 1950s, this task could no longer be accomplished according to accepted scientific principles. The primacy of unilateral, ad hoc political goals has derailed the possibility of objectively determining the size and qualitative rank of the lost libraries. The data established at that time were «accepted» in the [Polish] literature and were not later verified. Admittedly, they were no longer needed in political practice, as the possibility of compensating for the damage diminished year by year with the diminishing chances of signing a peace treaty with Germany in which the problem could be resolved. On the other hand, the nature of [the Polish People's Republic's] relations with the other perpetrator of the damage, the USSR [Union of Soviet Socialist Republics], precluded the possibility of officially addressing the issue at all²⁶.

Only the changes of the late 1980s and early 1990s, that is, the disintegration of the so-called “Eastern Bloc” consisting of the countries of Central and Eastern Europe that were in the USSR's sphere of influence, created an opportunity in Poland to undertake work aimed at a reliable and definitive analysis of the war losses suffered, including by libraries. In 1990, the Plenipotentiary of Poland's Government for Polish Cultural Heritage Abroad was established at the Ministry of Culture and Art in Warsaw. The Plenipotentiary began cooperation with the Polish Bibliological Society (PTB, founded in 1989 among others on the initiative of B. Bieńkowska²⁷), of which Bieńkowska was president at the time. The PTB attached great importance to the issue of library collections destroyed, seized and displaced as a result of World War II. Therefore, at the inspiration of B. Bieńkowska and as a result of the Society's efforts, in 1990 the Book Collections Documentation Workshop was established at the National Library in Warsaw, which was to among others collect data on historical book collections in Polish libraries, on Polish historical book collections in foreign libraries, and to keep records of these book collections²⁸. A year later, in November 1991, the Office of the Plenipotentiary of Poland's Government for Polish Cultural Heritage Abroad (BPD) began work, among others to undertake the registration of wartime Polish cultural losses. In February 1992, a workstation for library documentation was created in the Office, and in time a Library Team working under the leadership of B. Bieńkowska. His task was to prepare a summary of the losses of book collections caused by the German occupiers in the territories of Poland within the 1945 borders, using primarily the achievements of bibliology and its methodology²⁹. In creating the Library Team, they drew on the experience of the PTB community and the Book collections Documentation Workshop, already having a track record of documenting historical book collections and researching the history of libraries³⁰.

The result of the BPD Library Team's work was presented in a preliminary report published in 1994: Losses of libraries during World War II within 1945 Polish borders (Straty bibliotek w czasie II wojny światowej w granicach Polski z 1945 roku), Warszawa 1994), compiled with the participation of B. Bieńkowska and published under the scientific editorship of Andrzej Mężyński³¹. The data from this report has been corrected in the *Guide to the Loss of Libraries and Household Book Collections in Polish Occupied Territories in 1939–1945 (excluding the Eastern Territories)*³², published in 2000 in Poznań under the scientific editorship of Bieńkowska. In the end, the amount of losses in library collections in central and western Poland under German occupation during the war, documented by the BPD Library Team, amounted to more than 22 million volumes, including more than 5 million in specialized libraries (among others scientific libraries). It is estimated that this was about 70% of the total library holdings that existed in the area before the war. To this must be added the demolition, burning or damage to library buildings documented by the BPD Library Team, the destruction or devastation of their equipment, and the loss of library documentation, including inventories, catalogs and directories. Poland also lost more than 5,000 libraries with some 9–10 million volumes, including at least 621 specialized libraries that ended up outside its borders, in the republics of the USSR, after the war. Their list, along with data on the state of the collections before September 1939, was published in the guidebook Libraries in the Eastern Lands of the Second Polish Republic (Biblioteki na wschodnich ziemiach II Rzeczypospolitej, Poznań 1998), also compiled by the BPD Library Team under the scientific editorship of B. Bieńkowska.

However, it should be emphasized that the value of the aforementioned publications was not limited to the quantitative data contained in them. In fact, they caused a discussion among Polish bibliologists³³. Some scholars have pointed out, namely, the need to undertake research into the fate of the so-called “secured” collections after the war, including post-German and manor houses³⁴, as well of the problem of restitution of cultural property and the history of libraries of religious associations and national minorities – Jewish, German, Ukrainian, Belarusian and Lithuanian³⁵. And indeed in the following years such studies were produced³⁶. That the documentary work of the Team can be helpful in researching the history of libraries in particular regions and localities has been proven, for example, by the publications of scholars working with it on the wartime fate of Lviv libraries by Maciej Matwijow (1996)³⁷, Krakow libraries by Piotr Lechowski (1999)³⁸, or Warsaw libraries by Andrzej Mężyński (2010)³⁹. Problems with estimating wartime losses of Polish libraries also made researchers aware of the need for an in-depth look at the sources for the history of libraries in the first half of the 20th century, especially documentary records of various types, so far rarely used, although there was an awareness among Polish and foreign historians of their usefulness⁴⁰. On the subject of source science problems (the massiveness of the sources and at the same time their lack of their typology, external and internal criticism) that arose during the work of the BPD Library Team and on the conclusions arising from these problems, important for bibliological research, wrote B. Polish and Polonia's collections – heritage at risk

While researching the history of Polish books during World War II, the BPD Library Team also took an interest in Polish libraries and book collections operating outside the country after 1939: book collections that “migrated” from Poland during the war; libraries that were established by branches of the Polish Armed Forces in the West and agencies of the Polish Government in Exile; libraries that functioned in political and economic emigration circles.

The result of these works was the guidebook Polish Libraries outside the country in the years 1938–1948 (Biblioteki polskie poza krajem w latach 1938–1948), which was edited by B. Bieńkowska and published in 2005 in Poznań⁴³. The study by Urszula Paszkiewicz and Janusz Szymanski has a high documentary value, as pointed out by Oskar Stanisław Czarnik, who deals with the history of the press, books and reading among soldiers of the Polish Armed Forces in 1940–1946⁴⁴. At the same time, this guide was the starting point for research (inspired by B. Bieńkowska) at the Ministry of Culture and National Heritage in Warsaw (MKiDN) on the current state of Polish and Polonia's collections held abroad.

Since 1989, many Polish and Polonia's libraries operating outside Poland have been and continue to be liquidated. The size and content of their collections are also changing, among others as a result of other institutions taking over the resources of closed libraries and the selection of materials carried out on this occasion. There is an acceleration of the process of dispersal and fragmentation of often very valuable library collections, and sometimes their complete destruction. Thus, the stock of sources potentially useful not only for historians of Polish book and libraries abroad, but also for researchers of the history of Polish diaspora and Polish emigration is shrinking. B. Bieńkowska described this state of affairs as follows: “collections that are national heritage (scientific, historical) are and will continue to be neglected or gradually liquidated for lack of custodians, funds, interest”⁴⁵. At the same time, she said that in this situation their registry is necessary, which on the one hand will be a form of documentation of these collections, and on the other hand should function as a source of information about collections, ensembles and objects that are often forgotten, unknown and therefore not used by researchers, although they deserve it.

Accordingly, B. Bieńkowska developed the assumptions of the program “Registration of the Polish Collections Aboard, with special consideration for our threatened heritage” and from 2006 to 2015 managed its implementation in the Department for Polish Cultural Heritage Abroad of MKiDN (since 2016 Department of Polish National Heritage Abroad and War Losses). The program’s primary goals were scientific and documentary. It was also assumed that its implementation would revive foreign interest in Polish and Polonia’s collections, both in Poland and in the countries where they are kept. B. Bieńkowska was convinced that the implementation of the program would deepen the understanding of the fundamental importance of polonica for Polish culture and facilitate contacts between the owners of these collections and institutions in Poland, which will foster joint initiatives (among others, digitization of collections) and thus may contribute to the protection and popularization of this part of Polish cultural heritage⁴⁶.

The first stage of the program was completed with the publication of the volume Contemporary Polish book collections abroad. Information guide (Współczesne księgozbiory polskie za granicą. Informator, Warszawa 2009), compiled by B. Bieńkowska, E. Maruszak and Jacek Puchalski. The publication contains information notes on 746 libraries from 65 countries, belonging to Polish or Polonia’s organizations or institutions. This is a register of only some of the establishments that existed in 2006–2009⁴⁷; although now outdated⁴⁸, it is of great historical and documentary value. Describes collections of various types, numbers, and significance held in stand-alone specialized and public libraries, as well as non-self-standing libraries – from establishments with scientific book collections affiliated with the Permanent Conference of Polish Museums, Archives and Libraries in the West⁴⁹ to the book collections of secular and church institutions and organizations, including institutes, museums, archives, homes and centers, organizations, Polish⁵⁰ and Polonia's schools. In 2009, commissioned by the Department for Polish Cultural Heritage Abroad of MKiDN, with the substantive support of B. Bieńkowska a report was written by J. Puchalski and E. Maruszak on the resources and condition of Polish and Polonia's libraries abroad and the support (financial, organizational and substantive) they received from Poland⁵¹. The report was addressed to the Senate and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA) of the Republic of Poland responsible for supporting Poles abroad. The authors of the report argued, among others, that the threat to the analyzed collections stems from their underutilization, pointing to the need to create and implement a tool for sharing them. Soon, in 2012, as part of the project of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs "Cooperation with Polonia and Poles Abroad", Polonia Digital Library (Polonijna Biblioteka Cyfrowa – PBC) was established. The reason "for establishing PBC and its main aim is the preservation of the collections of Polish diasporas organizations worldwide, having resources for digitalization of Polonica, their presentation and provision on the Internet"⁵². It allows the use of materials previously unavailable to the public (0.5 million downloads of PBC materials by the end of 2021)⁵³. The PBC contains, among others, a manuscript of a Course in Bibliography (Kurs bibliografii)⁵⁴ – a lecture on bibliography prepared in 1831 for students at Warsaw University by historian, folklorist, translator, publisher and librarian Lukasz Gołębiowski (1773–1849). This manuscript was found in the Ilia Chavchavadze National Parliamentary Library of Georgia in Tbilisi during the implementation of the program "Registration of the Polish Collections Aboard, with special consideration for our threatened heritage". In 2017, it was published under the inspiration and scientific editorship of B. Bieńkowska⁵⁵. Course in Bibliography contains a lot of valuable information, among others on medieval codices once kept in Polish libraries and lost during World War II. Therefore, it has become a subject of study for Polish scholars⁵⁶.

Led by B. Bieńkowska, the team was obviously aware that particularly valuable collections and objects relating to Poland and Polonia are also found in foreign libraries, primarily in scientific libraries (national libraries, university libraries, organizations, scientific research centers and institutes) and in large public libraries. Collections and particularly valuable individual polonics held in foreign libraries were included in the 2011–2015 registration, as there are legitimate concerns for their future as well – are often not even initially identified⁵⁷. And yet, they are not only an important part of the Polish national legacy, complementing and multiplying the resources of Polish libraries and archives in Poland and abroad, but often belong to the common heritage of European countries. As a result of the registration work, the second volume of the Information guide was published under the title Polonica in Foreign Libraries (Polonica w bibliotekach obcych), Warszawa 2016). It contains informative notes on polonics in the collections of 470 institutions from 54 countries. In 392 cases, these are descriptions of materials in whole or in part identifiable as special collections, important for cultural heritage – manuscripts, old prints, cartography, iconography, music collections, archives, works of art or historical memorabilia⁵⁸. Of course, the volume describes only a portion of the actually existing holdings of foreign polonics. Polish and Polonia's collections, or their fragments or single objects are extremely numerous in world collections.. At the same time, they are scattered and varied in value, and library storerooms probably hide “many more secrets and hard-to-predict finds”⁵⁹. They prove, as B. Bieńkowska stated, “a much wider area of influence of the Polish book, both geographically and chronologically and materially, than it seemed so far”⁶⁰. Most foreign libraries have escaped such tragic fates as those that befell Polish libraries in the past. It would seem, then, that the Polish book collections and polonica stored there are assured existence. However, their situation has been changing for the worse for several decades. Poland's liberation from Soviet domination in 1989

led to a decline in Western countries' interest in events in Central and Eastern Europe, and consequently in writing related to our country. Other trends have also intensified, threatening the security of Polish collections abroad. They result, among others, from socio-demographic changes among Poles settled abroad. All these phenomena are intertwined with the crisis of books and reading, and thus librarianship in the world.

In this situation, B. Bieńkowska believed that the most important and urgent task was the further, planned and systematic, methodologically correct, properly using diverse sources, registration and documentation of polonics, especially those stored in non-library institutions, such as archives and museums – for they have collections, ensembles, individual, often extremely valuable polonica, least recognized so far. It is therefore necessary to expand, deepen and coordinate research on polonics in foreign collections. It will this superbly facilitate the search for Polish collections and individual writing objects in libraries, archives, foreign museums, also in private collections. Equally important is the digitization of the developed most valuable objects and their assemblages, as well as the inclusion of polonics in national and international databases and digital libraries. This will facilitate the development of international cooperation, among others including the exchange of organizational and methodological experience, the exchange of specialists, joint editorial and digital projects. B. Bieńkowska was convinced that it would be to the mutual benefit of GLAM institutions (galleries, libraries, archives, museums), because works of this kind make an important contribution not only to the historiography of the Polish book, but also to the history of libraries, librarianship and more generally – the culture of the book in other countries⁶¹.

Conclusion

The merits of B. Bieńkowska for the development of Polish bibliology cannot be overestimated, both in terms of her contribution to the body of work and to the theory and methodology of the discipline. Equally important was B. Bieńkowska for the practical application of bibliology for the documentation and therefore preservation of cultural heritage at:

- local scale, by managing library special collections (manuscripts, old prints, cartography, iconography, music collections, archives, works of art or historical memorabilia);

61 For more on this topic see B. Bieńkowska, E. Maruszak, J. Puchalski, Registration of the Polish Collections Aboard, with special consideration for our threatened heritage, the endangered heritage in particular (2006–2015), transl. M. Kisilowska, “Z Badań nad Książką i Księgozbiorami Historycznymi” 2017, special volume, pp. 25–39.

- regional scale; an example is Bieńkowska's initiative and active participation in the program to save Cieszyn's historical book collections, culminating in the establishment of the Cieszyn Library (Książnica Cieszyńska) in 1994⁶²;
- nationwide, for example, through the work initiated and undertaken by the PTB during Bieńkowska's presidency (1989–2003) or carried out on behalf of the MKiDN in Warsaw;
- Internationally, for example, the implementation of the program “Registration of the Polish Collections Aboard, with special consideration for our threatened heritage” in 2006–2009 “was one of the factors that influenced the development of cooperation between Polish and American librarians and influenced the founding of the Polish American Librarians Association – PALA in 2009”⁶³.

With a high degree of certainty, one can express the conviction that the works of B. Bieńkowska will be a point of reference for many researchers and will find their continuators, and bibliology itself, which in 2018 lost the status of an independent scientific discipline according the Polish ministerial classification of sciences, will remain a vital and “developmental” field of research according to Bieńkowska, occupying, as Bożena Koredczuk put it, “its rightful place in the structure of the sciences of social communication and media”⁶⁴.
